By Tim Carman We used to think of wine as rooted in tradition, with France at the center of the world. A classic restaurant wine list or retail store would start with Bordeaux and Burgundy, then work its way through Champagne, Alsace and the Rhône. Spain,... By Dave McIntyre We know malbec as the main red grape of Argentina. Traditionally, though, it was part of Bordeaux's blend, but it fell out of favor there, especially after a deadly frost in February 1956 killed many malbec vines. Growers favored merlot in... Aaron and Becky write and test recipes for Voraciously, The Post's team dedicated to helping you cook with confidence.... By Aaron Hutcherson and Becky Krystal Nate Mook remembers when José Andrés asked him to run World Central Kitchen. It was January 2018, and the nonprofit organization had largely transformed itself into a disaster relief organization following its groundbreaking work in Puerto Rico... By Tim Carman I studied food history and anthropology in college, and I remember that in one of my first classes, the professor asked everyone to write a short essay on a food that was "pure flavor." I can't remember what I picked, but it got me only a passing... By G. Daniela Galarza I have made this salad so many times this summer, it has come to feel like a good habit. It sure is one that's easy to stick to, a reliable combination of tasty, nourishing ingredients, easily kept on hand, and varied based on whatever ingredients... By Ellie Krieger The store closes Aug. 31. By Susana Guerrero Wu-Tang Flan ain't nothing to f—k with! By Nico Madrigal-Yankowski The food, from huevos rancheros to fluffy apple brandy souffle pancakes, has barely changed since 1982. By Madeline Wells On Monday, the beer company posted a video gloating about the prank. By Madeline Wells There's no analogue for causa in American cooking. Part cold casserole, part picnic-greatest-hits mash-up, the Peruvian dish is assembled like a trifle and resembles a 1970s congealed salad. To make causa Limeña, the dish's classic presentation,... By Caroline Hatchett I don't know about you, but I sure miss going to breweries. Remember what it was like? You just walked up to a counter, ordered a drink and then sat down — indoors? It was so easy. Those were the days. Friends, I hate to remind you we're still far... By Alyssa Pereira While most bars in the Bay Area remain closed while awaiting a loosening of shelter-in-place orders, some are rolling with the punches, working on creative ways to open up to customers again. In many counties, current rules dictate that bars must... By Alyssa Pereira Remember my last newsletter, when I told you San Francisco was preparing to re-open outdoor bars in late June? Unfortunately, a surge in cases put a stop to that shortly thereafter, prompting Mayor London Breed to "temporarily delay the... The wait is over for frustrated San Francisco bar owners who have been waiting to open their businesses while the city's restaurants have been in operation in various capacities since March. On Monday, June 29, bars across the city can finally... What will taprooms and beer bars look like as they start to reopen? Will it be anything like what we remember? And moreover, will bar-goers act any differently with the looming risk of the coronavirus present? "That's the million dollar question,"... Whether as an employee, a regular patron, or a traveling scout, beer bars, breweries, and pubs, have been at the center of my social and professional lives since I was legally allowed to enter them. With so much changing around us, will the bar or brewery taproom of the future be anything like what we remember? Jim Woods, who founded and owns Woods Beer & Wine Co., will be watching the changes in consumer habits over... By Michael Rosen Serop's is the pioneer of Chicken Shawarma (see picture left or above on mobile) in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. The earliest form of Serop's opened in Baton Rouge in 1979. Chicken Shawarma was a staple of the Greek and Lebanese restaurant scene in the beginning and is still a popular menu item today. Chicken Shawarma (marinated Chicken Breasts) and Gyros (a mixture of Beef and Lamb), both healthy and delicious, are slow-roasted vertically and basted with olive oil, garlic, and spices. What started with one restaurant in Baton Rouge in 1979 has grown to 7 restaurants in the Greater Baton Rouge area; and we're still growing! We'd love to share our past, our present and our future with you. Houmas House Estate, one of the South's oldest and most beautiful plantation estates, is the home of Latil's Landing Restaurant, The Carriage House Restaurant, Dixie Café, The Turtle Bar and The Wine Cellars of Houmas House. Breakfast, lunch, and dinner are available in both casual and fine dining settings. Just minutes from Baton Rouge and New Orleans, these restaurants have varying menus reflecting traditional Louisiana cuisine. Each menu is updated seasonally to reflect the availability of locally grown produce, providing a true farm-to-table experience. Both tourists and locals enjoy the quaint feeling of the intimate settings each restaurant and The Turtle Bar provide. It's easy to imagine dining in the 1830's when using exact replicas of the original china used by General Wade Hampton. Reservations are required for Latil's Landing and suggested for The Carriage House Restaurant.
